After capturing Gates’ supply wagons, Tarleton pursues the routed Americans to Hanging Rock.

General Johann DeKalb, with a small group of troops from Maryland and Delaware, makes a determined stand, but he is mortally wounded.

A determined British bayonet charge causes the untrained militia to retreat, many without firing a shot.

American troops under General Gates are surprised when they meet the rearguard of Lord Charles Cornwallis’ army, and form into line of battle.